

PETTIGO & TULLYHOMMON

Pettigo is a small picturesque village on the border of Co Donegal and Fermanagh. It is bisected by the Termon River which forms the border between Donegal in the Republic of Ireland and Fermanagh which is in Northern Ireland. The portion of the village in Northern Ireland is officially called Tullyhommon, but is locally known as "High Street" due to its hillside position overlooking the village. The village is situated in the midst of an area abundant with rivers, lakes, forestry and boglands, all just waiting to be enjoyed. It has a quality scenic environment and is officially designated as an area of outstanding natural beauty and an area of special scientific interest. For the wildlife enthusiast there is plenty to see and do while exploring this unspoilt and remote part of Donegal.
